CYBER SECURITY TIP: MONEY MULING

SO...WHAT ARE MONEY MULES?

A money mule is considered to be an individual that is recruited by cybercriminals to receive, move, or transfer illegally obtained money. Some individuals knowingly participate in these fraud schemes. Others unknowingly fall victim to these types of scams by participating in what they believe are legitimate transactions or are “conducting business” on behalf of a phony employer. If something seems too good to be true, often times it is. To avoid becoming a victim to being a money mule here are 5 quick questions to ask yourself.

- 1. Did I receive unsolicited contact, either by email or social media, that promised me an exorbitant amount of money for little to no effort? If the answer is yes, chances are this is very likely a scam.
- 2. Have I met this contact in real life? If you have never met the person in real life, and the person is offering to give you money under certain conditions, chances are this is very likely a scam.
- 3. What do I get out of this? If you have been promised a portion of the funds that you are asked to deposit or transfer and are told to keep it so long as you send them the rest, chances are this is very likely a scam.
- 4. What am I being asked to do? If someone is asking you to deposit funds into your account, and then transfer a majority back to them, or if they are asking you to deposit it into a brand-new account and transfer a portion over at a later time, chances are this is very likely a scam.
- 5. How am I being asked to send this money? If this person has asked you to return their portion of funds back via a money service (like Western Union, Moneygram), a wire transfer, gift cards, peer-to-peer apps (like Venmo, CashApp, etc.), chances are this is very likely a scam.
